More Than Meets The Eye...

The Pembroke Rooms, with their own bar & sunny private terrace, are suited to host events of every kind - whether it's a corporate meeting, large family dinner, engagement party or a good old-fashioned knees up. With their own wedding licence we can host your nuptials as well as a glamorous wedding reception.

If you want something less "tucked away", the formerly derelict stables situated at the end of the garden have been brought back to life. With draught bar, charcoal fire pit BBQ & nearby table tennis table they are the perfect place to throw a party or just chill with friends.

And newly-restored this year, is our Scout Hut, a village hall styled space, ideal for casual do's, club meets and informal gatherings.

We can plan events for 15 to 100 guests, please speak to one of our management team for further details.

Prized Pineapples...

In the 18th century, pineapples were status symbols and you could even rent one for a night!

Pineapples are a common fruit these days, however, in the 1700s, the fruit's crown-like top and gem-like texture was seen as a symbol of wealth and power.

Originally from South America, pineapples were discovered by Christopher Columbus on one of his voyages to the New World. When he brought them back to Spain, many Europeans - royalty in particular - were completely taken by the delicacy. It was a rare, beautiful fruit most people had never encountered before and artists began incorporating pineapples in their work -- whether lavishly depicted in a painting or elegantly carved into wooden furniture.

The pineapple made its way to England in the 17th century and by the 18th century, being seen with one was an instant indicator of wealth -- a single pineapple could cost the equivalent of $8,000 today. In fact, the fruit was so desirable and rare that consumers often rented a pineapple for the night to show off to fellow party-goers.
